

RCSI welcome prospective students

Before the Central Applications Office (CAO) deadline for applications to third level programmes came to a close, more than 500 students attended the annual open day at the Royal College of Surgeons (RCSI) in Ireland.

Second level students from across Ireland and abroad descended on the RCSI to find out about the pharmacy, medicine and physiotherapy programmes that the College has to offer.

During the day-long event, leaving certificate and A level students were given the opportunity to meet with RCSI staff, students and graduates, to discuss what it is like to study pharmacy and to take up a career in this area.

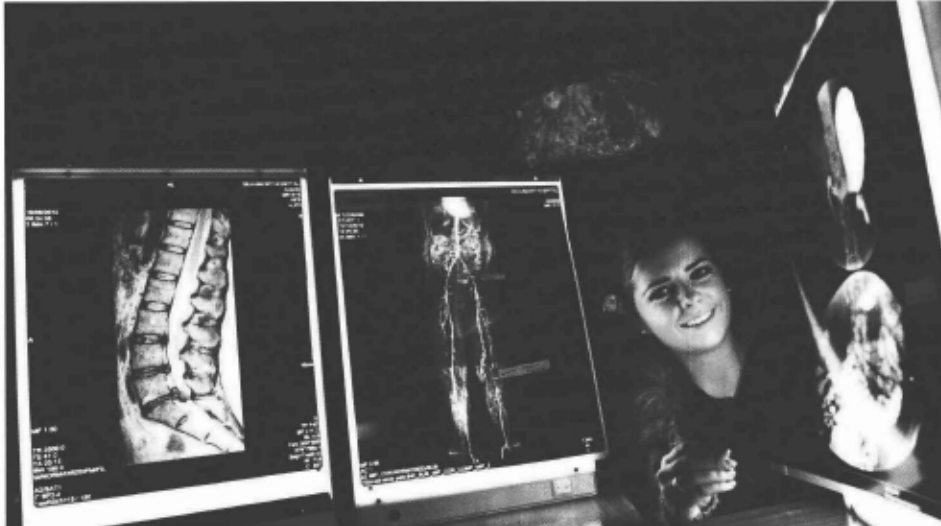

Caroline Moloney (18), and Karen Blaney (17) both 6th Year students from St Joseph's Mercy School in Navan, Co Meath taking each other's blood pressure at the RCSI Open Day.

Erica Hughes (17) a 6th Year student from Loreto College in Navan, Co Meath with a skeleton at the RCSI Open Day.

Eimear O'Reilly (16); and Erica Hughes (17) both 6th Year students from Loreto College in Navan, Co Meath with a skeleton at the RCSI Open Day

Mikaela Forde (17) a 6th Year student from Yeats College, Galway viewing some x-ray's at the RCSI Open Day.

Students viewing a 3D video at the RCSI Open Day

Anastasia Azareva, (17) a 6th Year student from St Pauls Secondary School, Greenhills, Dublin viewing a wax model of a skull at the RCSI Open Day.