Level:

This course is aimed and basic surgical trainees who are in their second year of training. All applicants must be registered with either the Irish Medical Council or the General Medical Council.

Details:

This course is designed to advance the practical, theoretical and personal skills necessary for the care of the critically ill surgical patients. It is aimed at surgeons and those who deal with surgical patients who are completing basic surgical training. It will be very useful across the range of surgical and related disciplines.

The course is designed to draw established and new knowledge and skills into formats immediately applicable to every day practice. The emphasis is on small group, hands on training and the performance of practical procedures. The course features simulated patient assessment, clinical decision making, dealing with relatives and analysis of data in critical care in addition to systematic coverage of necessary knowledge. Candidates are supplied with a detailed course manual (to keep) and personal feedback is provided throughout the course.
